Your one big thing::

I think the HDC does a fair job. My concern is that as much as the HDC looks at services provided, no one is really looking at the environment in which the services are provided. The health system, for a number of reasons, is steadily coming under increasing pressure ie. health providers as individuals are coming under increasing pressure. Quality has to suffer if resources do not keep pace with the increase in pressures. When health providers try to point this out they are seen as an "interested group" and thus not given as much "mana" would like to see health resource decision makers be more accountable for any short fall in services that they have had a part in (by not ensuring adequate resource).
